

November 2012

Dear Clients and Friends:

Much of what we know about life and the universe has been reduced to a few words and printed on t-shirts. One example reminds me of arguments we've been seeing in the Presidential and local campaigns. Logic: the art of being wrong with confidence.

I ran across an obvious computer geek at Parkway Plaza, complete with pencil in pocket. His polo shirt admitted Insufficient Memory at this Time.

Life is complicated, full of ups and downs. When you need to relax, put on a smile and your shirt that says I USED TO CARE ... but I take a pill for that now.

I found this humerus comes on a dust-colored shirt with a picture of a leg bone. It would make a great gift for an archeologist, but I don't know one.

This one fits me. I'm silently correcting your grammar. When people misuse "lie" and "lay," it's a struggle to keep my mouth shut. Talk show hosts will use the wrong word and I send them instructive emails, which is weird but satisfying.

Are you over 60? Then you'll recognize Hokey Pokey Anonymous -- a place to turn yourself around. And finally, the official Department of Redundancy Department shirt which says everything you need to know about your federal, state and local governments.

Is it just me, or could we use more t-shirts and less evening news?

Best wishes,

Charles M. Shackelford